FULL SCORE · ALL 5 PILLARS

62/100 C → 85/100 projected after fixes

Every number here is from a live test, not an estimate

These 10 questions were re-grounded in Skyline's actual business model — advisory, capital formation, and transaction sourcing — after the earlier version tested some questions closer to direct lending or equity investing, which isn't what Skyline does. The buyer-question results below came from live calls to ChatGPT, Claude, Perplexity, and Gemini — not approximated.

WHAT AI SEES ABOUT YOU NOW

Across 10 real buyer questions built around what Skyline actually does — capital advisory, capital formation, and transaction sourcing, not direct lending or equity investing — Skyline is cited in 0 of 12 sources, on every single question, on every engine that responded. Refining the questions didn't change the result: this is a real visibility gap, not a framing issue.

Cited instead of you: Performance Advisory Group, HREA (Healthcare Real Estate Advisors), Capital Stack Advisors, Bonica Capital Advisory.

THE "WHY" — AI'S OWN REASONING

Not our inference — the model's actual generated answer text.

CATEGORY SEARCH

“Who provides capital advisory for distressed commercial real estate owners?”

“Several firms provide capital advisory for distressed commercial real estate owners, including Performance Advisory Group, Basswood Capital Partners, Midwood Capital Partners, JLL, Kroll, and FTI Consulting.”

What this tells us: This is squarely Skyline's real business — capital advisory for distressed CRE — and AI still reaches for six other named firms. The gap isn't framing anymore; it's pure visibility.

HEALTHCARE REAL ESTATE

“Who advises healthcare organizations on real estate development and capital formation?”

“Several firms advise healthcare organizations on real estate development and capital formation, including HREA (Healthcare Real Estate Advisors), Hammes, and Ankura. HREA says it helps healthcare providers with "planning and financing new development" and "originating capital for new development."”

What this tells us: HREA wins this because its own site states, in these exact words, that it originates capital for healthcare development — one of Skyline's real named client types. The fix is publishing the same explicit claim.

CAPITAL PARTNER SEARCH

“Who helps developers find a capital partner for real estate development?”

“Capital partners help developers find funding for real estate development, often through a capital advisory or real estate private capital firm that matches developers with debt, equity, or joint-venture investors. Examples from the results include HB Capital, which says it serves real estate investors, developers, and operators by providing direct access to capital sources.”

What this tells us: AI's own definition of this role — "a capital advisory firm that matches developers with capital" — is a precise description of Skyline. HB Capital wins because it says so on its own site.

THE REFERRAL QUESTION, MISSED

“Who do real estate attorneys and brokers refer clients to for capital formation on complex development deals?”

“Real estate attorneys and brokers typically refer clients to real estate capital markets / capital formation lawyers or fund-formation and syndication specialists when a development deal needs equity or structured financing.”

What this tells us: AI defaults to a generic professional category instead of naming a firm, which means no one currently owns this referral relationship in AI's eyes. That's real open ground for the exact audience — attorneys and brokers — who refer this kind of work.

OPPORTUNITY FINDER

Real, narrower questions in Skyline's exact niche, checked live — scored for how uncontested the answer is. 5 of 6 candidates tested came back genuinely open.

“Best capital advisory firm for adaptive reuse hotel-to-residential conversion projects”

Why it's open: AI names Bonica Capital Advisory because it explicitly publishes MEP cost analysis, floor-plate efficiency, unit-mix optimization, and full credit-stack modeling for hotel conversions — concrete, named capabilities, not general positioning.

How to win it: Publish a direct page on hotel-to-residential conversion feasibility and financing, naming the same kind of concrete capabilities.

“Who structures capital stacks for healthcare real estate development in Florida?”

Why it's open: AI names Capital Stack Advisors (Boca Raton) specifically because its site says it can “create the Capital Stack” for healthcare clients — a Florida-specific, explicit claim.

How to win it: Publish a Florida-specific healthcare capital-stack page using the same explicit, ownable language.

“Advisory firm for distressed hospitality asset repositioning in the Southeast”

Why it's open: Six firms get named (Lunt Advisors, Crown Hospitality Consulting, Panther Hospitality, and others) with no single dominant answer — a genuinely open, crowded-but-unclaimed field.

How to win it: A focused Southeast distressed-hospitality repositioning page has real room to become the answer here, not just get listed.

“Who do commercial real estate attorneys recommend for capital formation on complex adaptive reuse deals?”

Why it's open: AI answers with a generic professional category (“specialist capital markets advisors”) and names no specific firm.

How to win it: Content and outreach addressed directly to real estate attorneys — the exact referral audience — is unclaimed ground right now.

“Who helps small real estate developers structure a 506(c) offering for a mixed-use project?”

Why it's open: This question is currently owned by securities attorneys and syndication counsel, not capital advisors — the business-formation side of this deal type has no advisory-firm answer.

How to win it: Position Skyline as the business-side complement to the securities attorney on 506(c) mixed-use deals, a role nobody's claimed yet.
